Student's thoughts about Artificial intelligence teaching?

By Caitlin

On April 29 2019, CNN 10 news talks on their show about kids using screens at schools.

Helpful or harmful read to find out.

CNN 10 made a segment about a school in Abu Dhabi that is using artificial intelligence to teach the students. The Olive Education Platform was founded on 2015 and introduced a new way of teaching in schools. In the program they replaced the regular system of a teacher and papers with artificial intelligence and laptops. It helps the students by seeing if the student is struggling with a topic and if so, then introducing it in a new way that the student will understand better. The data they collect helps making sure they know how to help as many students as possible.

Even though it is a big change, I think that it could improved the way children are learning. Instead of having to students stay with the class when they could move ahead. Or having the teachers stressed over finding different ways to teach the students. The students could go at their own pace and the system can just find a different way to teach. Along with the fact that it can help students, a student in the video in the even said, "When you are using books it was like so boring." For the students at this school it made learning and being at school more interesting. With time comes change and I personally think that the change here will help the students not only here but also everywhere else too.
